Citation for the National Security Medal

for Mr. George Bush

Director of Central Intelligence

Having previously distinguished himself in the service of his country, George Bush has made an outstanding contribution to the national security of the United States as Director of Central Intelligence. His unique background for this assignment included management of a successful business, experience as a Congressman, and service in highly important diplomatic posts at the United Nations and in the People's Republic of China. The role of Director of Central Intelligence has many facets and George Bush was outstanding in each, as adviser to the President, as leader of the U. S. Intelligence Community, as spokesman to the Congress and as the operating head of the Central Intelligence Agency.

As the leader of the Intelligence Community, he was directly responsible for major improvements in the allocation of intelligence resources and for increasing the responsiveness of the intelligence product to the needs of the policy makers and operating officials of the Government. His effectiveness as a spokesman, both within and outside the Government, did much to restore America's confidence in its intelligence agencies.

The achievements of George Bush in improving the responsiveness and the overall effectiveness of the Intelligence Community and the Central Intelligence Agency reflect public service of the highest order. His influence will long be felt as one of major significance to the accomplishment of the foreign intelligence mission of the United States Government.
